3. See Displayed

Singular group show.

Anton Kern Gallery, through August 22.

"Displayed" alights on the mind like a strange no-brainer, getting you to think about something you didn't know you needed to think about: that photos of objects or even paintings are like shelves full of stuff, platforms for re-framing thought. Nancy Shaver's gendered T-shirts on a table let you know sexism starts scary young; Margaret Lee places orchids in a ceramic platter in front of a polka-dot painting; Chris Martin hangs two paintings on the outside of the building. The whole show contains such clever multitudes.
